Gul Khan's clever, green eyes scanned the vast, snowy plains of Gilgit-Baltistan. He could see his entire land from the mountain that he was gracefully perched on. He had climbed up there in search of prey, however, there was none in sight. His hunger was mounting, "Where have all the animals disappeared?" he wondered.

"Even the snow is disappearing quicker than before. The whole world is getting warmer and warmer," groaned Gul Khan. He had not eaten all day and was getting worried about what he would feed his little cubs. Ever since the humans came in, they left no food for snow leopards like Gul Khan, and they always littered and polluted every area they visited. He sat at the edge of the mountain, and remembered the times before humans had invaded the lands. It was a time when snow leopards roamed the plains freely, and did not fear being hunted or hurt. The area used to be clean, pure and white with snow. It looked like paradise!

Unable to find any food for the day, Gul Khan started his long journey back to his cave. He gazed sadly at all the litter in his area, and hoped that humans would be less selfish, and leave a cleaner world for their children.
